 Whiskey has two legitimate spellings. "Whisky" is used in Scotland, Canada and Japan, and "whiskey" is used by the Irish and Americans.

 Whiskey was given its name from the Gaelic beverage "Uisce Beatha", which translates to "water of life."

 What is whiskey? To keep it simple, whiskey is any booze distilled from fermented grain mash. The only exception to this being some whiskey is made from corn, which doesn't always have to be aged.

 Scotch | whisky produced in Scotland, made from mostly malted barley and aged in oak barrels for three years or more.

 Bourbon | produced in the US, primarily in Kentucky. Bourbon whiskey must be made from a grain that is at least 51% corn.

 Rye | can refer either to American whiskey, which must be distilled from at least 51% rye and aged two years or more, or Canadian whisky, which interestingly, may or may not actually include any rye in its production process.
